

Writing, aka 'thinking in ink', can be a very powerful tool for self-development.

It helps people to analyse what has gone well and the factors behind it. It also helps us to see improvement opportunities when we feel we've fallen short of our standards or have learned an important lesson.

Here's a few questions which can help you start the process - try to put down your thoughts on paper for as little as 1 or 2 minutes or write for longer if you wish.

Some questions to get your writing juices flowing. Just pick one to begin with:

- 1. How did today go? How did I feel emotionally and energetically?
- 2. Describe one thing that happened today which put a smile on your face?
- 3. Are there 2-3 people or events which influenced your day for the better?
- 4. Did you encounter any difficult situations today? Any thoughts on dealing well with this issue or one of a similar nature in the future?
- 5. Do you think that something happened today which you will never forget?
