

It is important to look at the controllable factors which can lead to better energy levels.

Here we zone in on 3 areas:

Nutrition

We haven't fully covered this yet – Week 8 will go into it more in depth for your essentials but you can make an important pre-emptive strike with this exercise.

For the purpose of this exercise, please consider healthy eating as fruit, vegetables, poultry, lean meat, fish, lentils, beans, chick peas, nuts i.e. close to nature.

Unhealthy foods will be considered as processed and refined foods (pastries, chips, deep fried foods, heavy sauces, cakes, biscuits, most food items with a very long ingredient list and lots of E numbers).

How can you make eating healthier at home and at work easier for you?

How can you make unhealthy eating at home and work more difficult?

How can you make decisions in advance when it comes to the following days food or eating out in a restaurant that will benefit your health?

Can you begin tracking your calories with the FatSecret app to already get a better nutrition knowledge?

Break activities

Are there some non-computer related activities you could do during a break?
Pick 4.

Rank these from 1 = most refreshing to 4 = least refreshing.

☐	_____
☐	_____
☐	_____
☐	_____

How will you make sure that you take some breaks during the workday?

--

Movement

What sources of movement or physical activity do you enjoy?

Activity 1

--

Activity 2

--

Activity 3

--

Pick 3 of them and set a goal for each that you could aim towards (e.g. run 5km in sub 25-minutes)?

Goal

--

Goal

--

Goal

--

Is there a way you could include others to make you more likely to commit over time (e.g. join the intra company 5-a side soccer league)?

Activity 1	Activity 2	Activity 3

Could you make an investment in the activity to make you more likely to stick with it (e.g. invest in some new gym gear)?

Investment - Activity 1	Investment - Activity 2	Investment - Activity 3

Pick the one of the three that jumps out at you as the most fun?

Write down the next smallest action which you can take to get the ball rolling:

