

A big time saver which you can use is leveraging previous emails written in the past by saving as a templated email.

Here are some for you to get started, please adapt where you feel necessary to ensure your voice comes across.

Textbook Replies

1. You need more time before a full response

First of all, acknowledge you have received it so the other person won't feel ignored.

Reply:

Got it. I'd like to give this some more reflection.

Will be back in touch tomorrow/in a few days/before the end of the week.

2. Introducing people

The main goal here is to help colleagues from a deeper relationship while making them both look very capable.

Here is one for you to work off:

Subject - Introducing Peter and Paul

Peter is a fantastic Wellbeing Lead in a thriving company and has an impressive track record in helping their employees thrive. Paul is a dynamic health, wellness and personal productivity speaker and the author of "The Things That I Think I Know Which Might Definitely Work".

It seems like there might be the potential for a mutually beneficial relationship here.

All the best linking up!

3. Redirecting somebody who wants a phone call to email

Reply:

Thanks for writing and I would be happy to discuss at some point.

That being said I'm in the midst of working on [INSERT PROJECT NAME] and have banned myself from unrelated meetings. In the meantime, though, I'm happy to answer any questions you have through email.

4. Requesting a meeting agenda

Reply:

Thanks for including me. This sounds of interest.

Working on "project x" has meant that I'm facing a tight deadline. Can you forward me on the meeting agenda once it has been put together? This way, I can prepare beforehand or send you my thoughts before it takes place.

Please let me know.

5. Avoiding yet contributing to a meeting

Reply:

It's a very important discussion. I can't make it as the "project x" is taking up all my resources, however here are some thoughts which may be helpful for you to mention:

- 1.
- 2.
- 3.

Thanks again for keeping me in the loop.

6. Reduce your meeting time

Reply:

Is it possible to put [INSERT RELEVANT SUBJECT] at the start of the meeting? I can't stay for the entirety but would really like to deliver my input on it.

