

Before you start this review for the week gone and the one ahead, please ensure two things:

1. Turn off all distractions and ensure peace and quiet for the next half an hour. This small act could save you hours in terms of a more productive week to come.
2. The ideal time to do this is on Friday afternoon or Sunday.

Your weekly review action list

1. Go through this week's calendar/action list and tick off items complete on your capture list.
2. Go through last week's calendar and transfer any incomplete activities that are still relevant to next week or a relevant point in the future. Those that are no longer relevant, delete them.
3. Clear out your emails.
4. Go through meeting notes and action any follow up required.
5. Make sure all appointments for the following week are accounted for in your calendar.

Add your key priorities to allocated time slots. Bare in mind the type of task should influence whether it is matched with a high potential hour or not.
6. Have you included time for exercise and breaks?
7. If you're double booked at any time, ask yourself about your priorities then resolve.

If you feel overwhelmed by the week's activities ask yourself "what do I need to drop?" in order to ensure a balance between health, wellness and personal productivity.
8. Finish out by analysing what went well this week (3 things) and what is the biggest learning which you had this week.
9. Lastly, ask yourself: "how can I finish this week by showing somebody I care?".

e.g. making a charitable donation, giving your time to a good cause, showing a loved one what they mean to you, sending a joke to a friend, checking in on an elderly neighbour...
