

We all encounter difficult decisions and difficult conversations in our lives.

It is generally very important to get to know what our gut feel is on the topic. Sometimes we may be overcome by emotion which makes such clarity difficult.

Please use the following reflection exercise to help you get clearer on where your logical mind is at and what's the best next action based on your desired outcome.

1. What difficult conversation/decision do you have coming up?

2. What courses of action are you currently thinking about?

3. Do you feel myself leaning towards one in particular?

4. If a friend came to you with a similar issue then what would you advise them?

5. If the answers between three and four are different then why the discrepancy?

6. Forgetting about everybody else, what do you believe the best decision is for you?

7. If there are others involved, do you owe them a courtesy of communicating your needs, wants and emotions and giving them a chance to do the same?

8. Keeping in mind your long-term goals and your values, what action will help you get towards them or back on the track to achieving them?

9. How will you feel 10 minutes after the tough conversation?

10. How will you feel 10 months after the tough conversation?

11. How will you feel 10 years after the tough conversation?
