

1. Examine the decisions which you make in the morning which drain your energy. What are they?

(For example, what outfit to choose, what does Daniel need to wear and pack today - is it a PE or ordinary school day...)

Decision 1 _____

Decision 2 _____

Decision 3 _____

Decision 4 _____

Decision 5 _____

2. Now, ask yourself:

A. Can I eliminate the decision by preempting it and preparing in advance?

Decision 1

Decision 2

Decision 3

Decision 4

Decision 5

B. If it can not be eliminated, is there a way you can simplify the decision by limiting your options?

Decision 1

Decision 2

Decision 3

Decision 4

Decision 5

3. What items do you find yourself looking for before work on occasion?

(For example, metro card, laptop charger, bike lock...)

4. How can you for once and for all this evening decide on a final and definitive location for such items?

5. Here's a quick thinking task. Imagine a genie has given you an extra hour in the morning but the focus has to be on an activity that brings positivity to your day. List three activities that you feel would fall into this category:

Activity 1

Activity 2

Activity 3

6. For all activities:

A. If you work on this consistently in the long term, where could it bring you?

Activity 1

Activity 2

Activity 3

B. What could you do in 15-minutes or less to involve it consistently in your life?

Activity 1

Activity 2

Activity 3

C. What's the first step to get started on it right now?

Activity 1

Activity 2

Activity 3

N.B.: If you are using this to help motivate you to get up a bit earlier or generally just bring some more positivity into your day then please don't try to do them all at once. Pick the one that your gut tells you is most important and go with it for a month.

